U.S. vs. Qadhafi: Test of Wills in Chad War

By Bernard Gwertzman New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - Reagan administration officials have indicated that they regard the conflict in Chad as a major test of wills with Colonel Moamer

They assert that Colonel Oadhafi has made no effort to disguise his plan of controlling Chad and eventually unifying all of Africa's Moslems under the

Because of the Libyan leader's declared goal of a Greater Islamic State and his disdain for the independent African states created from former European colonies, the situation in Chad is deemed very serious by the administration.

Officials said Thursday that if Colonel Qadhafi, working through Goukoum Oueddei, former president of Chad, was able to overthrow the government of Hissène Habré, it was likely to cause problems for such countries as Sudan, Niger, Nigeria, Egypt, Cameroon, the Central African Republic and Senegal, all of which are pro-Western and all of which, in varying degrees, feel threatened by Libya.

There is a panse in the fighting now, but U.S. officials said that Libya, having helped Chadian rebels seize about half the country, was rushing in additional forces for a possible new offensive aimed at the capital

"I guess you could say we are coming to a crunch," an administration official said. "Qadhafi may try to push on further south, or he might be planning to partition Chad and avoid a battle with the French, but even that would be unacceptable to us and to everybody else since that would permanently destabilize Chad and put Libyan troops right on the western borders of the Sudan,"

"American policy is for Libya to get out of Chad," he said. "The Libyans should not be in Chad. We have to show the Libyans they cannot win in Chad. We also urged Mr. Habré last year not to cominue his civil war with Mr. Gonkouni but to work instead toward unitying Chad, a senior administration official said. Mr. Habré rejected the advice.

Mr. Goukouni then fled Chad and made his way to Libya once again to seek help from Colonel Qadhafi.
In interpreting Colonel Qadhafi's intentions in Chad, experts on Libya begin with his "Green Book," which sets forth the revolutionary ideology that Colonel Qadhafi calls the "Third Universal Theory." He advocates a restructured world, and that has explained Libya's backing of subversive or revolutionary and terrorist groups in such disperse places as Latin Amer-ica, Northern Ireland and the Philippines, officials

He has placed his emphasis, however, on Africa, particularly on the Sahel belt that cuts across the continent, where more than half the population is Moslem. In Chad, for instance, 50 percent of the population is estimated to be Moslem, the rest Chrisn or tribal. In Niger, Moslems make up 85 percent of the population; in the Sudan, 60 percent.

"As Qadhafi sees it, since the Arabs are already spiritually united through the Koran, there is a connection between Arab unity and Islam," a Nigerian scholar, Oye Ogunbadejo, wrote in the current issue of International Security, a journal published at Harvard 1981, by an ironic twist, Mr. Goukoum, who then was University. "Only the artificial political boundaries, president of Chad and who had invited the Libyans created by the former colonial powers, and the reaction of Chad, asked him to pull his forces out. Mr.

> Colonel Qadbafi has been accused of financing or directing subversive plots in such varied countries as Morocco, Niger, Sudan, Egypt, Tunisia, Ghana, Up-per Volta, Nigeria, Gambia, Somalia, Senegal and Mali. He has also been accused by the United States of sending assassination teams abroad and of providing haven for many known terrorists, including the plot-ters of the 1972 Munich Olympics killings.

The Reagan administration, from the start, has singled out Colonel Qadhafi for special attention. It has severed relations with Libya and banned the most of oil from there.

Mr. Ogunbadejo and others have said that given the discontent inside of Libya, the signs of occasional mutiny in Colonel Quilhafi's 55,000-man army and his $13-billion arsenal, the Libyan leader seems almost eager to embark on foreign adventure

Although France is also concerned about Libya's moves in Africa, it has refused, in part for economic reasons, to treat Colonel Qadhafi as a pariah. It buys oil from Libya and argues that it is important to keep lines of communication open with the Libyans.

President François Mitterrand has also sought to distance his policy toward Chad from Washington's. But U.S. officials in the White House, Pentagon and State Department said Thursday that U.S. and French policy has been closely coordinated.

A State Department official said: "I can't remember

Mr. Arens, in an interview published Friday in the Tel Aviv newspaper Ma'ariv, said that if an agreement to end the area's sectarian fighting "is not reached before our departure, everything is possible and there is no room at all for optimism. The agreement must be reached before Israel leaves and the Lebanese Army moves in."

The conservative Tel Aviv newspaper Yediot Ahronot took a similar tone, saying that after the Israeli pullout, "a bitter battle will commence in the Chuf mountains."

Israeli troops moved into the Chuf region after the invasion and now provide nominal security in the area, from which Druze Moslem artillery batteries have nonetheless launched attacks on Christian sectors of Beirut.

In Jerusalem, the U.S. special envoy, Robert C. McFariane, met Friday with Prime Minister Menachem Begin and other officials and discussed Israeli steps to ward off "upheavals in the region."

Later, Mr. McFarlane went to Cairo for talks with President Hosni Mubarak on the stalled negotiations to get foreign troops out of Lebanon.

Dog Days

With Congress in recess and President Ronald Reagan gone to California to work on his ranch for three weeks, thou-sands of lobbyists and power brokers have departed from Washington, leaving the capital during the sluggish, steamy period aptly known as the dog days of August. But politicians, wherever they are, are worrying about campaign funds for next year's election.

Bob Perkins, treasurer of the National Senatorial Republican Committee, appealing to potential American donors, sent a letter from Europe, where he has been traveling, to 300,000 prospects. His message, on paper with the letterhead of Paris's Hotel Prince de Galles, described the "shocking" conditions in France under the Socialist government, which Mr. Perkins said has created "a nightmare," driving the country to bankruptcy and filling French people with rage.

The big mailing was sent from Britain because, a Repub-lican Party official said, "Americans pay more attention when the postmark is England."

Microbursts of Wind Called Peril to Planes

WASHINGTON — A weather phenomenon called a microburst is potentially lethal when airplanes encounter it at low altitude and occurs more frequently than generally recognized, two scientists have told Congress.

A microburst is a downdraft that may be no more than two miles (3.2 kilometers) wide. As winds approach the ground, they spread out in all directions. An aircraft encountering a microburst at low altitude flies first into a headwind, then almost immediately into a tailwind possibly strong enough to push a jetliner to the ground.

South Korean Families Reunited Through TV

Dispersed by War Three Decades Ago, Relatives Find Each Other on the Air

By Steve Lohr

New York Times Service SEOUL -- With a look of expectant anguish, Koo Yang Ae pressed a small handkerchief to the side of her face, her hand trembling slight-

"Can you remember your younger brother's name?" she asked. "Of course I know it," replied Koo Yang Soon. "His name is Sung He Wan, and he was born after our father died."

"Then you must be my sister," concluded Koo Yang Ae. Both women buried their heads in their hands and sobbed uncontrollably.

The two women, now in their 60s, had not seen or heard from each other in more than 30 years. since shortly after the start of the Korean War in June 1950. Like millions of other Koreans, the two sisters were forced to move repeatedly and separately during the early stages of the three-year conflict as battle lines shifted. Consequently, they lost track of each other.

The Koo sisters' ceremony of verification and remion is one of more than 3,000 such cases that South Koreans have watched in a television campaign to reunite dis-persed families, which began June 30. The program, one of a series by the state-run Korean Broadcasting System to mark the 33d anniversary of the start of the Korean War. was planned to last two weeks.

After the public reaction became apparent, it went on day and night for more than a week, for up to 12 hours a day. Now the program has been trimmed back to 13 hours each week, but television officials say it will run at least through the end of the year.

At the outset, the network expected to handle 2,000 cases at most. To date, more than 100,000 families have applied for help. Of those more than 20,000 have appeared on television.

At the station in Seoul and its 10 local affiliates throughout the country, people hoping to find lost relatives sign up. The people are gathered in studios and then shown on the air one by one, each holding a placard with an identifying number in the upper right-hand corner. On the placard is written the person's name, usually the name of the person being sought and identi-fying details, such as scars or the circumstances of their last moments together. Some were small children when they last saw their parents and do not recall the par-

Typically, the first communication between two long-separated family members will be between two stations, with the two parties speaking by telephone while viewing each other on the two-way television. Later, most of the face-toface reunions are also televised.

The stories that are told are as moving as the scenes that are shown. One mother lost her son in Pyongyang, the North Korean capital, when they were boarding a train of refugees fleeing south. She hoisted the child onto the over-crowded freight car and then went back for what was left of her possessions, a bundle a few steps away. Mugabe Shifts Stance, Attacks Reagan Policy As Bolstering Pretoria

By Jay Ross Washington Post Service

HARARE, Zimbabwe -- Prime finister Robert Mugabe, shifting his public assessment of the Reagan administration, has sharply criticized U.S. policy in southern Africa, saying that it has encouraged South Africa to become more aggressive toward neighboring black-ruled nations.

The original hopes he had that President Ronald Reagan's policies "would lead to transformation in said in an interview Thursday, "were dashed," and instead "South Africa has tended to be more intransigent, relying on what it be-lieves to be United States support." Mr. Mugabe's criticism of Mr. Reagan's policy of "constructive engagement" with South Africa is likely to have repercussions beyond Zimbabwe's borders. A succession of top administration leaders, including Vice President George Bush and Chester A. Crocker, assistant secretary of state for African affairs, has visited Harare to consult with him on policy toward South Africa.

Mr. Mugabe, regarded as one of Africa's most influential leaders, seems to be setting the stage for his official visit to the United States next month, his first during the Reagan administration

Previously, he had tempered his public remarks regarding the U.S. policy of seeking better relations with white-ruled South Africa to gain concessions for the powerless black majority. Two years ago, he said in an interview that he was optimistic that Mr. Reagan would be more effective than former President Jimmy Carter in pressing for political change in southern Africa. Now, however, with the six-year-old Namibian negotiations apparently stalemated and South Africa program as a lever, is now trying to increasingly accused of destabiliz-press North Korea to reopen talks ing its neighbors, Mr. Mugabe de-

He described constructive engagement as "a policy of acquiescence in South Africa's policy.

Mr. Mugabe, 58, attacked the U.S. proposal that Namibia's independence be linked to a withdrawal of more than 20,000 troops from neighboring Angola. The Ameri-Namibia and South Africa," he cans, he said, are "using the Namibian situation to achieve an end in our region which they were not able to achieve otherwise," a reduction of the Soviet sphere of influ-

> Sitting at a desk in his sparsely decorated parliamentary office. Mr. Mugabe responded in a soft voice to questions about hundreds of atrocities allegedly committed by the army earlier this year against civilians in southwestern Matabeleland, the stronghold of the opposi-tion leader, Joshua Nkomo, in an effort to eliminate anti-government

Several months ago he vehemently attacked reporters, church leaders and voluntary agencies that had publicized the charges.

A military investigation he ordered five months ago has yet to be completed, Mr. Mugabe said. He did not say when it would be fin-ished but added that anyone who committed brutalities "will be brought to book."

killed by dissidents, and six foreign tourists were kidnapped, including two Americans. The victims have not been seen since their abduction 13 months ago.

"We will use force against force" to deal with "those who are bent on acts of lawlessness to overthrow the government," Mr. Mugabe said.

We tried our best" to accommodate Mr. Nkomo by bringing him into the government three years ago, he said. "One really wonders what more we are expected to do."

Mr. Nkomo has charged that Mr. Mugabe's guerrillas intimidated voters in the elections that ended a seven-year war for majority black rule. Mr. Mugabe fired him from the cabinet last year, accusing him of stashing arms to overthrow the government. Mr. Nkomo fled the country in March, saying that the army had sought to kill him, and he returned only this week.

"We cannot view Nkomo as a person entitled to be given a place in government purely because he is Nkomo," Mr. Mugabe said, "The choice of the people has got to be respected. I'm not going to give way to satisfy Nkomo's own ambitions. Nkomo has got to adjust to defeat and that is that."

He reiterated his vows to make the country a one-party socialist state but emphasized that the process should be gradual. The oneparty system is "better than the amorphous situation you get in Europe, he said, adding that "it makes for greater democracy.

He called socialism "the only morally tenable philosophy" because it is selfless and preaches equality. According to officials of the Agency for International Development, the U.S. effort, which represents a shift in policy, is being pur-sued partly through the United Nations. But agency officials, at a meeting Monday in New York. also invited major private U.S. aid agencies to become involved in im-proving food distribution in the area and asked them to formulate Representatives of these organizations said later that the agency's offer was a surprise and that they needed time to consider the prospects. Some said they had been told that conditions had deteriorated dramatically in recent months. Besides the drought, intensified fight-ing in a guerrilla war in parts of the country has hampered the distribution of emergency supplies.

Although Washington has been supplying emergency food aid, the administration a year ago decided against making a further commitment until the Soviet-supported Ethiopian government stepped up its own efforts. Accordingly, no commitment for continuing food relief was made in the agency's 1984 budget request to Congress.

Although Ethiopia reportedly has not allocated new resources, it was decided in Washington that the emergency justified additional steps by the United States. AID advised Congress recently that $3 million in additional funds would be sought.

"The United States recognizes has bethe Pthiopian government has be-come a Soviet ally but we say a hungry child knows no politics and you cannot blame a child for what the government does," said M. Peter McPherson, the head of AID. He also requested that the UN take the lead in coordinating the operations of relief donors. U.S. food aid programs in Ethiopia amount to $6.7 million for this year. An estimated 3 million Ethiopians are being affected by drought and as many as 1 million may face its forces had killed 709 enemy solstarvation.

New Lisbon Museum Displays Modernists

By John Damton New York Times Service

TISBON - After 21 years of acquisitions, more than three years of construction and a lively controversy generated by conservationists, Portugal's first museum of modern art has opened in Lisbon. It has been greeted with raves and about 4,000 visitors in its first three days of operation.

The museum, the Center of Modern Art, is a gift from the Calouste Gulbenkian Foundation, which was set up after the death in 1955 of the Armenian multimilionaire and passionate art collector who chose Portugal as his The center was inaugurated July adopted country in World War IL The foundation, created with the wealth Gulbenkian amassed from his investment in Iraqi oil, says it is the largest private charitable insti-tution outside the United States. It is a major force in the fields of art, science and education. Fourteen years ago, it opened the Calouste Gulbenkian Museum to display 5,000 pieces amassed by Gulbenkian during his lifetime. It was Perdigão's dream to construct a modern art center, as a complement to the classical pieces housed in the Calouste Gulbenkian Museum next door.
In his remarks at the ceremony,

Perdigão touched upon the controversy that surrounded the construction of the museum, situated on the southern side of a tranquil park in ists engaged in a long, angry battle to preserve the open space.

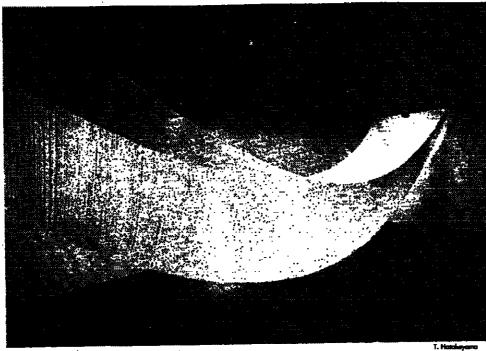

He also hinted at another contro versy, albeit a less public one --- the fact that Gulbenkian's eclectic taste in art, which encompassed antiquities from Egypt and Mesopo-tamia, tapestries and bookbindings from Persia, and paintings by Rembrandt and Rubens, stopped in the early 20th century. His own collection comes to an abrupt halt with Degas and Monet.
"Very late Impressionist painting does not interest me," he once wrote to a German art collector. "I remain faithful to old, more or less Classical traditions."

By way of indirect rebuttal, Per-digao wrote - and had the words inscribed in brass in the marblelined lobby — that "art, Gulben-kian knew very well, is not a static product of man's creation; on the contrary, history teaches us that it Sousa Cardoso, Armando Basto, is an activity in constant evolution and transformation, and that is one There is also a fair sampling of of the reasons for its great appeal."

The Musée d'Art et d'Histoire, 2 Rue Charles Galland, has a lighthearted colection of Egoyomi and Surimono, the fine wood prints used as calendars and greeting cards. That the length of a duck's feathers or a willow branch, the size of various turtles indicate the long or short months of the year is pretty obvious. But even with no clue to the symbolic intent, the visitor can very much enjoy the cunning glance of a monkey, the bound of a carp in a torrent, the detailed everyday objects lined up on the painter's table or the geisha's dressex. Signed by Hokusai, Kunisada or Hokkei, these 18th- or early-19thcentury prints fascinated painters

Hunger for Past Fuels Boom:

By Souren Melikian International Herold Tribune

THE aesthetic perception of our apparent in the months to come.

The change has gone unnoticed, largely because every separate indi-cation in the last few years has been mistaken for a fad, rooted in attempts by museum specialists at launching new art historical theories or in speculative moves from dealers anxious to create new markets. But fads cannot be sustained for very long. While some trends have cooled down, none have been reversed. Pieced together they fit into a coherent pattern.
In painting, the new mood is toward the highly figurative. At the top, this explains the soaring prices of neoclassical painting of the late 18th and early 19th centuries, as well as the recognition of 19th-cen-tury masters that can neither be described as academic nor Impressionist — Fantin-Latour, Gerôme and others. Lower down, architectural and topographical drawings are rising sky-high, following the new taste for highly descriptive de-tail. So is academic art and even pure kitsch on one condition: It must offer a faithful rendition of interior scenes or landscapes from our familiar surroundings as they were 100 years ago. This is a worldwide trend.

It has sent paintings of the American West soaring higher than they have ever been. But it is also at the bottom of the frantic search for Australian landscapes in Australia, for works of South African interest in South Africa, for 19th-century views of Hong Kong in the Far East, for views of Palestine equally sought after by Arab and Jewish buyers, or for 19th-century paintings of Jewish interest which, have never been so expensive. Political and religious allegiance may play a role but it does not explain all, if only because those very political and religious allegiances have not sprung up overnight. They were already there in the '60s when nothing of the sort was happening.

The combined effect of the discussed last week in this column, and of the yearning for a certain image of the past accounts for the highly complex price movements that have recently characterized decorative arts, particularly French furniture. At the top, those very few pieces that can be positively linked with royal palaces or be proved to be the work of cabinetmakers working for the court, beyond any possible doubt, are climbing fast and high. Below, pieces that project what could be called the "Versailles image" are likewise soaring. They include the finest Boulle furniture. Media's Weathermen All Wet, Expert Says

The Associated Press LONDON - Britain's mass me-. dia weather forecasters are all wet, a former British Meteorological Office scientist has concluded in an informal study published in Britain's New Scientist magazine.

Since 1950 Britain's Meteorological Office has claimed an accuracy of up to 90 percent for shortterm forecasts, Ivor Williams said. But modern weather reports on British radio, interpreted from weather office forecasts, prove accurate only 42 percent of the time, he said. National newspapers seldom did better, he said. He concluded that radio, televison and newspaper weathermen can seldom give an accurate forecast because they cannot cover the subject in the few seconds or lines they are al-

Galanos Knits Draw Bravos at N.Y. Shows

By Bernadine Morris

NEW YORK — First there were only gasps and a few squeals. Then came the bravos. How many times in the annals of fashion have bravos been heard for sweaters? Probably not too often, but these were not ordinary sweaters. They were the first knitted styles designed by James Galanos. A mixture of angora and cashmere with a pile as deep as fur, they were almost floor-length, accompanied by jackets deeply encrusted with pearls and other jewels. They are one of the first fresh ideas in evening clothes any contemporary designer has had in a long time.

By the time the last style appeared, in white angora with a thickly jeweled tunic over it, the audience was on its feet signaling its approval.

The glittering sweater outfits came at the end of a long show of fall and winter fashions that started simply enough, if a Galanos design can ever be called simple, with tailored clothes, and gathered impact as the styles moved to evening.

The day clothes stopped at the knee and had ample, roomy tops, as well as the myriad intricate details that characterize this designer's fashions. The bloused, hip-length jackets that hugged the hips as well as the seven-eighths-length barrel-shaped coats both were accompanied by short, skinny skirts. Offpeat ideas such as irregular-shaped fronts, a single lapel or a pleated yoke in back distinguished the suits as well as the chemise dresses that followed. Many styles appeared to wrap to the back. The chemises in particular had little flurries of pleats at the hem.

Another recurring theme was the shirttail tunic, inspired, the

Another recurring theme was the shirttail tunic, inspired, the designer said, by a classic man's shirt. With curved hemlines, the tunics and their accompanying skinny skirts were in magnificently patterned silks to which the designer gave further individuality by pleating and tucking that produced solid-color panels on plaids and turned checks into stripes.

The closest things in the fashion world to the French couture are the clothes of James Galanos. "Expensive clothes are here to stay," he said. "They stand for luxury. There are people who want the best quality. I know how to give it to them. Galanos was, in a sense, born knowing what style is all about.

After a brief apprenticeship at the couture house of Robert Piguet in Paris, the Philadelphia-born designer opened his business in Los Angeles in 1951. Though the clothes he made were ready-to-wear, the workmanship and the styling were comparable to the French. So were the prices, mostly in the $3,000 to $10,000 range.

"I don't try to shock," the designer said. "I leave that to the younger people."

Now 58, Galanos is not averse to trying out new things. In addition to the long sweater-dresses, there were finffy deeparmhole sweaters belted over long, slim skirts.

The clothes are all made for the luxurious life but, unlike the French couture offerings, Galanos takes into consideration that American women do not generally live in castles. So there are some easy, fluid styles, such as the shirt-tunics and the chemises. There's something about warm weather clothes that brings out the best in designers. The resort openings, which touched off a salvo of lighthearted, imaginative fashion designs when they began earlier this month, have continued to impress viewers. "It's the only time of the year when you design for the climate you're living in," said Donna Karan, responsible with Louis Dell'Olio for the Anne Klein collection. "It's been a hot summer and we've tried to make clothes that look cool and relaxed." The relaxed feeling has extended to the presentations themselves, which have taken place before small groups of viewers, in an informal way. It has made it possible to get a much clearer view of the clothes and what the designer is aiming at.

The resort clothes have an attractive nonchalance, typified by the looser fit. The longer lengths, descending almost to the ankies, look right in the many collections they dominate. They are almost always balanced by knee-baring styles which, in the case of Ralph Lauren, take the form of shorts rather than skirts.

Skin-tight fit has receded in favor of easy cuts that skim the body and sometimes float around it. Not only do the looser shapes look more appropriate for warm weather, but they also seem considerably more modern than the vamplike clothes that were rampant last year. All this is part of a collection that is strongly reminiscent of 1930s spectator sports fashions, a theme that also turns up elsewhere, bringing with it echoes of Deanville, Wimbledon and Newport, depending on your frame of reference. When properly interpreted, as it is here, it has a more touch of class.

I am convinced that Gasiorowski is sincere, but that is not enough. He is making a mess of his life as an artist because he is apparently trapped in a certain doctrine of what painting is meant to be. Devoting a museum show to his pro-foundly unimaginative rebellion brings back all the cheaper rhetoric of 1968 - not the true flashes of insight, but the turgid rehashing of banalities. Do Not Jeer Nkomo to Zimbabwe — and none whatever to jeer him for doing so. In reclaiming his seat in Parliament after five months of self-exile, Mr. Nkomo shamed his detractors. He condemned the tribal rebellion he is accused of formenting and again pleaded for reconciliation. But his statesmanship was greeted with petty gibes and a chorus of laughter.

There was nothing funny about Mr. Nkomo's flight from the country whose independence he helped establish. Two members of his household were killed when his home was ransacked by the army.

His departure from the country seemed to confirm Zimbabwe's drift toward a one-party tribal dictatorship under Prime Minister Rob-

It took courage for Joshua Nkomo to return ert Mugabe, Mr. Nkomo's principal, and un-Zimbabwe—and none whatever to jeer him forgiving, rival. Zimbabwe is not a dictatorship, however ominous Mr. Mugabe's control over the press and the zealotry of some of his cabinet allies. For all the charges of treason against Mr. Nkomo, none has been proved. It was unworthy of the prime minister to decide Mr. Nkomo as the "father of dissidents."

A stalemated guerrilla war will not be ended, and Zimbabwe's democratic promise will not be realized, if the country is not big enough, and safe enough, for a loyal opposition. Mr. Mugabe came to power preaching the need for conciliation between whites and blacks. Mr. Nkomo's return gives him a chance to show that magnanimity is colorblind. — THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Promises in Pakistan

Mark Twain said it was easy to quit smoking cigars since he had done it dozens of times. Pakistan's President Zia has found it almost as easy to announce elections -he has done it six times since seizing power in 1977.

Yet in a full-dress statement to his handpicked legislature, he now insists he means it. He promises that elections will be held, constitutional democracy restored and his military regime disbanned by March 23, 1985.

Pakistanis are not holding their breath. General Zia, they observe, also says he wants to amend the old constitution to give wide powers to the president, who would be indirectly chosen by provincial assemblies and Parliament. And the voting would be supervised by his own military, not by a civilian interim government. So his election plan looks like a formula for prolonging his rule.

Washington, which considers General Zia a useful ally, is likely to veil its doubts and appland his words. Some even take the condescending view that dictatorship is all that Pakistan can expect, given a fractious history, ethnic quarrels and a Soviet war in neighboring Afghanistan. But acknowledging usefulness does not require swallowing blarney. By Pakistan's own standards, the Zia regime is oppressive and arbitrary. Political parties remain illegal, and it is even a crime for opponents to meet privately. General Zia's prom to lift martial law comes in the midst of a bareknuckled army crackdown on a national civil disobedience campaign. What were once rights in Pakistan are now but a memory.

The general's predicament is all too familiar.
He finds himself sitting in the same saddle as fellow-soldiers in Turkey and South Korea: All claim they want to turn over power to civilians when and if politicians prove themselves responsible. They want the prestige of democracy but not its risks. By stifling dissent they undermine belief in their avowals.

It is possible that this time General Zia means what he says. Americans should welcome moves that restore life to parliamentary politics and an independent judiciary. Whatever he does, the United States may still find it necessary and expedient to provide the general with military help. But until he genuinely delivers on his promises, applause is premature. - THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Computers, Codes, Kids

The kids probably lured you, on a lazy midsummer evening to a cool theater to see one of the season's better Hollywood offerings, "War Games." Adolescents love the story not only because it centers on the kind of whizbang home computers they all covet, but especially because the hero, a bright but lazy 16year-old left entirely to his own devices by preoccupied and bamboozled parents, manages to use his computer to put one over on the high school principal, win the affection of the prettiest girl in class and save the world from nuclear holocaust about to be caused by generals, scientists and world leaders. President Reagan, who saw the movie at a White House screening early this summer, liked it, too.

Well, if you thought this high-tech plot was just a diverting summer fantasy, think again. Perhaps inspired by the movie, in which the hero uses his home computer and a telephone computers, a group of 15- to 25-year-olds in Milwankee, using computers of their own, managed to gain access to unclassified information stored in a nuclear weapons lab computer. This kind of invasion of someone else's computer is against the law, but apparently the Milwaukee youngsters had no criminal intent.

They just liked the challenge involved in breaking the code and getting into a system. It is not hard to do; in three cases they found that the key granting access to information was the use of the imaginative password "system."

No harm seems to have been done by this caper, and some good may come of it. Defense and scientific experts have been jolted by the realization that teen-agers can crack supposedly confidential systems; they have scurried to improve security. And Milwaukee school administrators, while publicly disapproving of the adventure, are entitled to a little private satisfaction. Some of the youngsters in the group have been enrolled in a special computer training program at a public high school, which has obviously been successful beyond their teachers' wildest dreams.

Those of us over 35 who are still computer illiterates have cause to worry about how we able but ingenious with computers. The true generation gap is between youngsters who are growing up with computers and parents who are intimidated by them. Sad to say, the distance is growing between aficionados of the floppy disc and aging masters of the curve ball.

Ira Gershwin's Legacy

His lyrics are rooted in America's subconscious. Éven a scattershot listing — "Embrace-able You," "Let's Call the Whole Thing Off," "A Foggy Day," "Summertime," "Lady Be Good," "Stairway to Paradise," "Our Love Is Here to Stay," — evokes his way with words. The man knew how to arrange them, how to rhyme them, how to create the simplest, most delicious phrases. He believed that a competent lyricist shouldn't be precious or condescending. And he never was.

In that sense, Ira Gershwin, who died Wednesday at age 86, was a democrat, small "d". He eschewed the lowest common denominator. Still, he made deft allusions that neither insulted nor excluded listeners. Witty, literate and fresh, he believed that everyone could share his pleasure in language.

A short, round, shy man with a fondness for cigars, Gershwin, who had been born to Russian Jews on the Lower East Side of New York, helped shape the truly American art of musical comedy. When asked which came first, the words or music, he said he normally fitted words to music, adding, "What usually comes first is the contract."

Détente in New Hampshire

Almost unnoticed amid the debates over MX missiles, arms negotiations and gunboat diplomacy in Central America, the Russians are quietly waging — and apparently winning — a subversive campaign in New Hampshire.

We are not talking about a struggle for hearts and minds. We are talking about a campaign to quench American thirst and fill Soviet cash registers. In April, [state] Representative Richardson

Benton of Chester noticed bottles of Stolichnaya vodka for sale in a state liquor store in Hooksett. Patriot that he is, Mr. Benton went home and wrote to Liquor Commissioner Jean Wallin that in view of the Soviets' invasion of Afghanistan, it was inappropriate to sell Russian products in New Hampshire.

Not on your life. Stolichnaya vodka brings $110,000 a year in sales statewide - about $80,000 more than its nearest competitor. Citing profits that vodka sales bring to the state, and the Soviets' consequent support for the New Hampshire budget, Mr. Wallin told Mr. Benton to fight the Russians on another front. Ah, capitalism!

It's Time the U.S. Put Castro to the Test

WASHINGTON — Both the United States and Cuba have reacted positively to the peace process initiated by the Contadora countries - Mexico, Venezuela, Colomand Panama. It is time for Washington to test Fidel Castro. But any test must be realistic about what ington can expect. The legacy of the past will not be easily erased. In the 1960's, our aim was to undermine and overthrow Mr. Castro. Following the failure at the Bay of Pigs and the missile crisis, the United States entered into an understanding with the Soviet Union: Moscow would not reintroduce strategic missiles in Cuba, and in return Washington pledged not to invade Cuba or seek to subvert the Cuban Government. We have sought to isolate Mr. Castro and, for the most part, our hemispheric friends have supported us. We have accepted, however reluctantly, a Cuban Marxist state as an accomplished fact. Our complaints are real and not without substance. We should not buy the contention of some that it was our confrontational opposition that threw Mr. Castro to the Russians, helps keep him within their embrace and forced him to adopt Marxism and maintain this ideologic cal bent for more than two decades. Mr. Castro is where he is because he took Cuba there. He bad plenty of opportunity, after the overthrow of Fulgencio Batista, to move Cuba toward socialist, nationalist objectives unhampered by the United States.

The Reagan administration's display of power in Central America has not gone unnoticed in Havana, of course. Also, Mr. Castro is hurting. The Cuban revolution has not yielded hoped for economic benefits. Moreover, in 1986, Mr. Castro will ba's huge debt to Moscow.

Booming tourism from the United States would mean hard currency. Though the Cuban market is not significant for the United States, and we are not particularly interested in Cuban sugar, an easing of the trade embargo would be welcome in Ha-vana. So would the ending of Mr. Castro's isolation in the Western Hemisphere. In addition, while remaining dependent on and allied to the Soviet Union, and maintaining a Soviet military presence strictly with-in the United States-Soviet understandings of 1962, 1970 and 1979, Mr. Castro would find it in his interest to change his status as nearly total hostage of Moscow. The United States and Cuba have a long and varied agenda to discuss. We have every right to insist on compensation for expropriation of pri-vate property of United States citiBy Joseph J. Sisco zens. There should be an understanding on prisoner exchange and a return of those Cubans that Mr. Castro dumped on us from his prisons and mental institutions. There are also difficulties with drug trafficking and air piracy.

All of these are important, but the heart of the problem is Fidel Castro's unwillingness to keep his hands off other countries, in the Caribbean, Central America and worldwide. He cannot and the United States should not expect him to give up his revolution in Cuba. He needs it to maintain his position at home. Moreover, conditions of poverty, injustice and inequality in the Southern Hemisphere make Castroism, with or without Fidel, attractive to the masses until such time as hemispheric gov-ernments can assure a better longrange alternative. Mr. Castro can continue to shout his Marxist slogans - provided he stops supplying the rebels in El Salvador through the Nicaraguan conduit, pulls out his advisers and ends his meddling throughout the hemisphere. A serious negotiation embracing such a broad agenda would tell us more clearly whether Mr. Castro is willing to moderate his conduct, and whether he has any real interest in redressing the imbalance between Havana, Moscow and Washington.

The likelihood is that Mr. Castro is posturing — that he is not sufficiently concerned to negotiate seriously. But the United States ought to put the onus on him, if for no other reason than that it will strengthen the U.S. standing in the hemisphere, help develop additional support for our policy in Central America and help promote progress toward an essential consensus at home.

days as the villain in the basement of the White House - the president's national security adviser who, like Henry Kissinger and Zhigniew Brzezinski, is wielding power at the expense of the secretary of state.

It is a ridiculous "silly season" analogy. Unlike Mr. Kissinger and Mr. Brzezinski, the judge has no ambitions and few ideas. He is a pleasant, intelligent man, an amateur in 3 professional's job. If he is miscast, that is not his fault but the president's. He is not the cause but the victim of the buddy system.

Every president in recent memory has had a trusted friend in the White House, Mr. Wilson had his Colonel House: Mr. Roosevelt his Harry Hopkins, who lived upstairs in the White House, Mr. Truman and Mr. Kennedy their chums, who diverted the president from his troubles.

Mr. Reagan, however, is the first president since the position of assistant for national security affairs was created in 1947 to put his closest friend in this critical job, with the power to control the flow of facts from State, Defense and the Central Intelligence Agency.

The National Security Act that established Mr. Clark's job assumed that the assistant for national security affairs would be a detached and objective official with wide experience in the conduct of foreign policy, who would monitor the information from State. Defense and the CIA and reduce it to to manageable proportions for presidential decision.

Presidents Nixon and Carter gave this assignment to Mr. Kissinger and Mr. Brzezinski respectively, not because they knew them well but because they thought, with good reason, that Mr. Kissinger and Mr. Brzezinski knew more about the tangles of foreign policy than they did.

Mr. Reagan had a different idea.

He appointed Mr. Clark not for his age or objectivity but for his personal loyalty. And in this capacity Mr. Clark has served him very well. Mr. Clark is not trying to challenge Secretary of State Shultz for the con-

WASHINGTON — Judge William Clark is being cast these days as the villain in the basement of would be trouble for the president in Congress and with NATO during the coming presidential election.

And that is precisely what Mr. Clark wants to avoid. Whatever serves the president's interests, as he sees them, he is for; whatever opposes the president's interests he is against. This is not ideological but personal. Is the president getting in trouble with the allies on the gaspipeline contracts with the Soviet Union? Very well, Mr. Clark will agree with Shultz to pull back.

Does the right wing of the GOP oppose selling grain to the Soviet Union, though the farmers of the Middle West are for it? In that case. Mr. Clark is for the sale because the farmers need the cash and Reagan needs their votes.

On the other hand, if the press is saying that Mr. Reagan is not really in charge of foreign policy, and Mr. Reagan wants to demonstrate that he is. Mr. Clark will encourage him to take charge and send the fleet to Central America, without waiting for the consent of Congress or even the secretary of state.

But there is no point in blaming all this on the judge. This is the way the president wants it. Never mind that the only top official here who know. less about foreign affairs than Mr. Reagan is Mr. Clark. The judge is his buddy as he was in Sacramento. his shield against the cabinet and the press, who will look after Mr. Reagan's interests.

And the irony of this is not that Mr. Clark strengthens the president but dramatizes his weaknesses. It is a case of the blind leading the blind, and Congress and the allies are on to it. But this does not seem to bother the president, and the judge answers to nobody but his skipper.

President Reagan's reply to his critics about Central America, Chad, Mr. Clark and other potential disasters is that the press is engaged in a campaign of "hype and hoopla" and on these two subjects you have to pay attention, for he is the expert. The New York Times.

French Government Can't Fill Its Intellectual Void

PARIS — Compulsive summer reading for France's political class has been a newspaper debate over why the country's intellectuals have abandoned the Socialist government. The govern-ment itself launched the courtoversy.

Its official spokesman, Max Gallo, in private life a novelist, wrote in the French newspaper Le Monde that France's intellectuals have lost their sense of political commitment. They are no longer hommes engages, as were the Gides and Mairauxs at the time of the Popular Front. He blamed this on the disillusionment of intellectuals with Marxism in the 1960s, and on the failure of the rebellion of May 1968 to produce much of lasting consequence. He suggested, as well, that it has become fashionable to be on the right.

He said that it was time for intellectuals again to take a hand in public affairs in support of the Socialists, because "it is not perhaps too much to say that the success of the left — and indeed, the destiny of France itself - depends in great measure on the movement of ideas." The response to this must have poisoned the holidays of President François Mitterrand and his colleagues. Instead of sympathy, Mr. Gallo's article evoked a series of attacks upon the Socialist-Communist government as intellectuals explained why they indeed did not support it, or preferred at best to keep their distance from it. There was also a cruel account in Le Monde of just how hard the Socialists have tried to recruit major intellectuals to government service, how strikingly they have failed, and how bitterly disap-pointed they are. The key case was that of Michel Foucault, the philosopher, well known in the Unit-ed States and Canada, who was pressed, without success, to become cultural counselior in the French embassy in Washington. Other figures, By William Pfaff including the historian Emmanuel Le Roy Ladurie and the political philosopher, Raymond Aron, have from the start been critics of the Socialists. Those intellectuals who accepted government posts were mostly from the second rank. Regis Debray, the writer and sometime Latin American revolutionary, who is a counselor to Mr. Mitter-and, and Jack Lang, a man of the theater, now minister of culture, have been the government's most-publicized intellectual members — other than Mr. Mitterrand himself. Neither carried much weight in intellectual circles before coming to office.

The government has turned to scientists to find friends, inviting them to dinners and receptions, naming them to committees and cultural m together with people from the theater and movies, and what Mr. Debray himself calls the "B.L" (basse intelligensia, literally the "low intelligen-tia") of teachers, researchers, and functionaries, who make up the base of the Socialist Party.

A principal reason the Socialists have sacrificed the wide sympathy they enjoyed before coming to power is their governmental coalition with the communists. But they have also lost because of what one of their critics in the current debate (a critic on the left) ferociously calls "The same myths! The same icons! The sacrifice of the economy to an ideology from beyond the grave. And then this cronyism, the [Socialists'] naming of their pals to committees and commissions [along with] pedagogues of every kind, who denounce only the privileges they don't possess."

Yet the things being said against the Socialists in this affair (which goes on) offer little that is new. The criticisms reveal how distant the Socialist Party is from the serious intellectual life of the country, and how inadequate its intellectual preparation for power really was, but they also show how little the intellectuals themselves seem to be able to contribute to the policy debate.

In this, Mr. Gallo can find his justification and his revenge. Part of the explanation for this undoubtedly lies in the fact that so many overriding problems of the present are economic in origin, and intellectuals (certainly as these are identified ;) in France) are infrequently interested in economics or competent to deal with economic questions.

Another contributor to the debate quoted Saint-Just: that nobody governs innocently. This truth has contributed to the political disengagement of many intellectuals, their turn to the private and the particular, following the collapse of the utopian political thought of the past. Still another wrote that "socialism and culture are metaphysically contradictory and historically irreconciliable" because the egalitarianism of the former will not tolerate the exceptional. But that could just as well be said against democracy (and has been).

Mr. Gallo has pointed to something that is not peculiarly a French problem, but is most evident in France where the intelligentsia's role in politics, and on the left, has been so large. The issues that dominate society today do not fit into the established formulas of political and social policy - or for that matter, of economics. Yet little of substance is offered in place of those old ideas. Where are the innovators? We live off ideas from the 18th and 19th centuries, and in economics, those of the early 20th. The major intellectual figures today are historians, literary critics, philosophers - and scientists. Public affairs are left to second-raters.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The Madrid Conference Was a Charade teaching golf to wolves. Some East-

WASHINGTON — A Western diplomat at the Madrid conference on "security and cooperation" noted a Russian delegate's suntan. The Russian said he had just returned from Spain's Atlantic shore where he had seen the ocean for the first time. The tanned fellow was Igor Andro-pov, 41, son of the Soviet leader.

That episode, says Max Kampelman, chief U.S. delegate, expresses, metaphorically, the purpose of the process begun at Helsinki in 1975 and continued in Madrid, The purpose is to teach the insular Soviet elite the geography of the Western mind, "to bring the world to them."

But the effect on them is negligible.

The effect on us is debilitating. After 34 months of meetings, the 35 participating nations are about to accept a 35-page document. It sharpens some definitions of the obligations Moscow will continue to ignore. It also calls for future meetings to clarify commitments (such as peaceful settlement of disputes and reunification of families) that were clear enough at Helsinki.

The Helsinki accord was a dubious achievement. The West acknowledged what the Russian army had settled 30 years earlier; Soviet domination of Eastern Europe. In exchange, Moscow made numerous empty human-rights commitments, and promptly smashed those of its citizens rash enough to act on the Helsinki agreement.

Mr. Kampelman argues, convincingly, that the Helsinki process - an ongoing arraignment of Soviet tyranny --- has constructively shaped public opinion in Western Europe, and has facilitated public acceptance of new NATO missile deployments. The value of the Helsinki agreements is that they are not honored, and thus produce a court in constant session. But there is a cost to the West that · Demoralization is generated by an international agreement that is violated in virtually every particular by one side while the other side merely negotiates follow-on agreements that also will be largely disregarded. Furthermore, as the public becomes used to the sight of Western and communist diplomats deliberating about freedom of expression, travel, trade unions and other matters, the public concludes that the people talking so earnestly, for so long, share a political vocabulary and frame of reference.

By George F. Will

There are few possibilities for communication, let alone accommodation, between nations with opposed definitions of all important political concepts, from freedom through justice. So the Helsinki process spreads a fog of false but soothing assumptions. (We now speak routinely about Soviet "trade union leaders" and "journalists," although there are no such Soviet persons, within the Westem meaning of the terms.)

Mr. Kampelman asks: The process begun at Helsinki will continue, so what is the U.S. alternative to particination - boycott it, leaving our allies to wage political warfare alone? Mr. Kampelman is convinced that Soviet officials are deeply distressed by the Western consensus against them on human-rights questions since Helsinki. The purpose of the Helsinki process, he says, is to keep Moscow on the defensive and force it to pay a political and moral price.

He believes Soviet leaders do not possess the moral indifference of vigorous barbarians. Rather, theirs is an other-directed regime, desiring respectability as well as power.

Perhaps. For educating the educa-ble there is no better teacher than Mr. Kampelman, a tough intellectual. But teaching civility to Moscow is like ern European countries have complied reasonably well concerning matters such as family reunification. But the West knew from the start that it would be futile to hope the Russians would agree at Madrid to stop jamming Western radio broadcasts — which, if the words had any meaning, Moscow agreed to do at Helsinki. Fifty-one Russians who believed in the Helsinki accord and organized to monitor their government's compli-ance are in jails, labor camps, "psy-chiatric hospitals" or internal exile. Since the Madrid meeting began, 500 Russians have been convicted for po-litical or religious "crimes," Jewish emigration has virtually stopped and Poland has been suffocated.

Still, one salutary effect of the Helsinki process is on the morale of a few valiant persons — dissidents in the Soviet sphere, including many in prison. Recently, when a dissident released from the Soviet Union was introduced to Mr. Kampelman, he kissed him, exclaiming that while in prison he and others had been heartened by Mr. Kampelman's relentless indictment of Soviet non-compliance with Helsinki undertakings.

Mr. Kampelman has quietly but effectively achieved relief for many persons suffering Soviet persecution. However, dissidents will be devastated if the Madrid conference ends with no tangible gains for those who risked --- and lost --- so much because they took Helsinki seriously. Specifically, no document should be signed with Anatoli Shcharansky in prison.

Were even a fraction of the Helsinobligations fulfilled by Moscow, the Soviet system would be changed. That will not happen. And the rele of 1,000 Shcharanskys would not change the Soviet system. But it would release heroes and partially redeem the Helsinki charade.

ECONOMIC SCENE

By MICHAEL J. PIORE

U.S. Undergoing Organizational Shift Decline Toward Flexible Production Systems

N EW YORK — U.S. business is engaged in a major organizational transformation. This transformation is an effort to accommodate the instability and uncertainty that has marked the economic environment of

It represents the abandonment of a strategy of mass production of standardized products for stable, mass markets, in favor of more flexible and adaptable systems of production and marketing. This in turn requires a reorientation in thinking about national economic policy. It is too early to assess the full implications of this change in business strategy, but some things are already clear.

First, the pressures producing these changes are not inevitable or irreversible. The business environment of the earlier postwar period was produced by an institutional structure designed to stabilize the domestic economy and ensure its expansion. The instability of re-cent years is largely attributable to the increasing internationalization of markets and the absence of institutions capable of stabilizing the

A federal effort to provide direction to national economic development does not make sense.

Through the debt crisis of the major developing countries, the United States has acquired the leverage to impose stability on the international economic order. But that leverage has been used to thwart the development of stabilizing institutions.

The United States has opposed measures that would stabilize commodity markets, restore fixed exchange rates and promote international expansion, insisting instead on policies of restraint and contraction. Washington has favored an environment in which U.S. business organization as now constituted is least able to compete; and, in this way, has forced the reorientation of organization and productive technology.

Protectionism will not remove the pressures generating these changes.

U.S. markets are too small, too unstable and growing too slowly to sustain existing organizational and technological structures. More trade, not less, would thus be required to make those structures viable.

Given the direction in which the United States is moving, "industrial policy" in the form of a federal effort to provide direction to national economic development does not make sense either. Such a policy would be meaningful as part of an effort to restore the dynamic of mass production through a new international economic order and to negotiate the U.S. position within it. Without this effort, what is required is a social policy to ease the transition away from mass production to the emergent alternative. The inherent flexibility and adaptability of this alternative obviates the need for the kind of national planning that the concept of

What is required for the success of the emergent economic alternative is the reassertion of the legitimacy of much more conventional forms of communal activity and governmental action. The new structures appear to require institutional supports modeled on traditional structures now under attack: the public educational system, land-grant colleges, the agricultural extension service, Social Security, the national railroad and highway programs and the protections the federal government has provided for trade union organization.

Administration Policy

The policy of the Reagan administration is one reason to be concerned about such communal institutions. But a more profound reason for concern is the incentive structure inherent in the emergent forms of organization and technology compared to that inherent in the old.

In mass production, both equipment and labor skills are highly specialized to a particular make and model, and production occurs in large, integrated organizations. This enables the organization to capture the returns to investments in training, research and development and the provision of much of the overhead capital. Since the business concern reaps the return, it is generally willing to make the investments.

In flexible forms of production, labor and equipment are more general, organizational units are smaller, and both labor and technology circulate more freely among different enterprises. The private incentive to provide training and research is thus much weaker,

Communal institutions are required to channel competition. Competitive pressure is much greater in the new economic environment than it was in the old. The pressure will lead to growth only if business responds through innovations in the product and in production. Such innovation, moreover, requires a close collaboration between labor and management and between contractors and subcontractors. But the competitive pressures are such that, unless limited by communal institutions like trade unions and social regulations, they sooner or later force business to cut wages to labor and payments to subcontractors. Competition through exploitation then becomes an alternative to genuine innovation and destroys the collaborative relationship required for such innovation to occur. The kind of market pressure that public policy is seeking to promote will thus prove destructive of economic progress.

The writer, a professor of economics at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, contributed this article to The New York Times.

$500-Million Fall Strengthens Bonds

NEW YORK - The basic U.S. money supply, M-1, fell $500 million in the latest week, the Federal Reserve reported Friday. The drop brought M-1 within striking dis-tance of the Fed's growth targets. David M. Jones, economist at Aubrey G. Lanston & Co. said M-1 now is $1 billion above the Fed's target of 5 percent to 9 percent growth, down from $5 billion only a few weeks ago. "This good news, along with signs the economy is losing steam, will be good news for the bond markets," he said.

Indeed, Treasury bonds, which about Treasury and acres. For lunged Thursday and early Friday, rose roughly a point following the Fed's report.

"It's a good gness we will see no further tightening by the Fed for a significant period of time," Mr. Jones said.

William V. Sullivan, Jr., senior vice president at Dean Witter Reynolds, said it is "not outside the realm of possibility that the Fed has actually nudged the federal funds rate down." The key overment be night rate has been slightly lower the past three trading days, after pushing up to 9% to 9% percent.

The Fed also reported that U.S. commercial banks averaged net borrowed reserves of $457 million in the week, normally a signal that the Fed is making less money available to banks to lend.

But Mr. Sullivan believes that figure "could overstate Fed intentions. For sure, the latest money number takes pressure off the Fed to consider a hike in the discount rate and the prime rate will stabilize at current levels."

M-I, comprised of cash cash-like bank accounts, was a seasonally adjusted average of $516.9 billion in the week ended Aug. 10 compared with a revised $517.4 billion the previous week.

In the latest 13 weeks, M-1 averaged a 13 percent rate of gain.

Commercial and industrial loans at the nation's major banks fell $220 million in the latest reporting week, following a gain of $1.58 bil-lion the previous week. NEW YORK - American Brands Inc., the oldest tobacco company in the United States, is sitting on so much money these days that it can afford to be

When Norton Simon Inc. went on the auction block, American Brands was approached by invest-ment bankers who knew the diversified company had cash and credit of more than $2 billion for nontobacco acquisitions. And when Stokely-Van Camp Inc. was looking for a friendly company to save it from a takeover by the Pillsbury Co., Stokely's investment bankers also came to American Brands.

American Brands refused in both cases This is a company, says Edward W. Whittemore, its chairman, that is waiting for just the right opportunities to spend its tobacco fortune. Like a collector of bottle caps or matchbooks, American Brands is look-

Brands is looking for companies much like itself:
profitable, well-known and old.

Among its acquisitions have been the 190-year-old
Jim Beam Distilling Co.; a 126-year-old British tobacco company, Gallaher Lid., which markets Benson &
Hedese circumstant in Evenue: the Andrew Jensens Co. Hedges cigarettes in Europe; the Andrew Jergens Co., a 101-year-old cosmetics maker, and the 99-year-old Franklin Life Insurance Co. Earlier this year, American Brands acquired Pinkerton's Inc., the 134-year-old

The company's products now include cutlery, cookies, soap, cigars, bourbon, hand lotion and paper shredders. Mr. Whittemore, who developed his man-agement talents in the office-supply business, is eager to link American Brands' growing office-supply busi-ness to its security business, which includes Pinker-ton's and Master Lock, a lock manufacturer. His company, which already has spent $2.1 billion on diversification, intends to spend $2 billion more in the next five years. So American Brands is looking for products to thread its empire of lotion, locks and life

Much of its aquisition war chest comes from tobac-co, a business that, despite taxes and health warnings, has 52 million loyal smokers. A single percentage-point share in the American tobacco market is valued at $180 million in annual sales. And, as American Brands' cigarettes are well established, the company does not need to advertise heavily nor to promote

In addition, production advances have made ciga-rette making one of the most productive industries in the country. "Cigarettes throw off cash," said Jeffrey Weingarten, a tobacco analyst for Goldman, Sachs &

The tobacco industry is growing at only 2 percent a ear, while other markets promise faster growth. Mr. eingarten expects American Brands to announce at least one more acquisition before year-end.

Executives at American Brands indicate that the company is having preliminary discussions with several potential acquisition candidates. The company recently announced a $300-million debt issue to raise

The non-tobacco strategy, Mr. Whittemore says, is aimed at rejuvenating the company, expanding its earnings base, reducing its dependence on tobacco and pulling American Brands out of its nostalgia for the days when it was the only tobacco company in America. That monopoly ended in 1911, when the trust-busting Supreme Court forced its breakup. From its pieces came the British American Tobacco

U.S. GNP Growth At 5-Year High In 2d Quarter

By Caroline Atkinson Washington Past Service

WASHINGTON — The U.S. economy roared ahead at an annual rate of 9.2 percent in the second quarter, the fastest quarterly growth rate in five years, while cor-porate profits recorded their big-gest jump in eight years, the Com-merce Department reported

The swift pace of recovery, which has taken economists by surprise, will likely continue during the third quarter before slowing somewhat by year-end, analysts said.

It was accompanied by slower inflation than previously estimated. Prices rose by 4.4 percent in the second quarter, rather than the 5.2 percent increase first reported, the Commerce report said.

A separate government report published Friday sounded a warn-ing note about the future strength of recovery. Factory orders for major consumer goods such as washing machines and cars dropped by 3.6 percent in July, only the second decline since the recovery began, the Commerce Department said. However, much of the decline was due to a decline in orders for aircraft and parts, which move erratically from month to month.

The Commerce Department had originally reported that the nation's gross national product rose at an 8.7 percent annual rate in the second quarter, after allowing for inflation. The upward revision left the second quarter increase the big-gest since an 11 percent rise in 1978 and "one of the larger ones on record," the Commerce Department chief economist, Robert

The recovery has given an enormous boost to U.S. company profits. After-tax profits climbed by 14.8 percent between the first and second quarters, the biggest quar-terly gain since 1975, Friday's report said. The $15.9 billion increase was the largest dollar rise in profits series of positive economic signs showing that the recovery continues to build and pick up steam." Asked whether the quick pace may lead the Federal Reserve to tighten credit policy and push np interest rates, Mr. Speakes said "we have no complaint" about the Federal Reserve's monetary policy.

The White House press spokesman, Larry M. Speakes, hailed the new GNP figures as "the latest in a clines in the unemployment rate.

High interest rates are viewed by most analysts as the major threat to the economic recovery. The Feder-al Reserve has tightened credit conditions in recent weeks in an attempt to slow the rapid growth in the money supply. Friday, the Fed reported a $500 million drop in the narrow M1 measure of the money supply, which includes cash and checking accounts, in the week to August 10. Financial markets had been hoping for a decline.

However, the surge in profits reported Friday "provides a strong incentive for increased business spending on inventories and capital goods," Robert Dederick, Commerce undersecretary, said.

Before-tax profits rose even more strongly than after-tax prof-its, with a second quarter increase of 18.5 percent, the report said. Mr. Dederick commented that this profits measure "leaped forward by almost one-third from the fourth quarter of 1982 to the second quarter of 1983, following a drop of 18.1 percent during the 1981-82 reces-

The GNP increase was revised upward because of higher than esti-mated investment, a slower pace of inventory run off, and a better trade performance, the Commerce report said. A consumer spending spree was still by far the biggest force driving the economy during the quarter, with spending in constant 1972 dollars up by $23.2 billion at an annual rate from the first three months of the year.

Third quarter growth is likely to be fueled by a swing in business inventories, as firms start to produce more to build up their lean stocks, and by further increases in consumer spending, analysts said.

Congress Is Warned Of Bulge in Deficit United Press International

WASHINGTON — The federal deficit will hit a record $207 billion this year, nearly double the record set in 1982, and stay that high for years unless Congress cuts spending or raises taxes, the Congressio-nal Budget Office said Friday.

If Congress does enact all of the spending cuts and tax increases called for in its recent budget resolution, the deficit would dip to $192 billion in fiscal 1984, which begins Oct. 1, and gradually drop to $143 billion in 1986, CBO chief Alice Rivlin said at a news conference. "If Congress does not implement the budget resolution, then there will be continuing deficits in the range of $200 billion for the next several years, for as far as the eye can see," Mrs. Rivlin said. High deficits would mean higher interest rates, slower economic growth and an end to the current conomic recovery, she said. In an attempt to slash the deficits, the 1984 budget resolution approved by Congress earlier this year called for $73 billion in tax "As computers and robots take business cycle, "the gain is not in improve through the remainder of over more and more functions in those sectors at all," Mr. Eckstein the year, according to a report by the factory and office, a two-tier said. In fiscal 1982, the federal budget deficit was $110.6 billion - also a record. The CBO said that if the 1984 budget is implemented by Congress, the deficits would range from $183 billion to $192 billion in fiscal 1984, $176 billion to $180 billion in 1985 and $143 billion to $146 billion in 1986.

The deficit projections have to be expressed as ranges because Congress put a contingency spending fund in its budget resolution. The money from that fund would only be used if Congress authorized some new recession-relief programs, which is unlikely.

The revised estimates are $5 billion to $14 billion lower for fiscal 1984 than the CBO projected in its February report. Most of the reduction is accounted for by recently enacted budget measures and stronger economic growth, Mrs. Rivlin said. In its latest estimate, the CBO

Control Data 'Supercomputer' Firm Will Intensify Competition |

By Michael Schrage

Washington Post Service WASHINGTON - Control Data Corp., the Minneapolis-based computer company, has an-nounced that it will spin off a new company to design and build "su-percomputers." The move intensifies the race between the United States and Japan to be the world leader in information technology. Supercomputers are designed to process information thousands of imes faster than ordinary computers. Moreover, several supercomputer projects, most notably the one sponsored by Japan's Ministry of International Trade and Industry, are exploring different designs

When continental Europe's busiest and most influential people (those listed in The International Who's Who) were queried about their reading preferences, 35% of them named the International Herald Tribune. That's more than read any other English-language magazine or newspaper.

Each day, the Trib reaches more than a third of a million readers in 164 countries around the world. Edited in Paris, printed in Paris, London, Zurich, Hong Kong and Singapore, it is the world's only global newspaper, required reading for decision-makers in business, finance, industry, government and the professions.

Consider these facts about the Trib's readers from the latest audience survey:

Average reader personal income: $70,383;

 81% have earned one or more university degrees; 48% are in Senior Management;

 23% are Chief Executives, Owners or Proprietors; 64% are involved in corporate purchasing decisions.

The Trib's readers are leaders. Top customers and prospects for a wide array of quality goods and services. That's why leading advertisers rely on the International Herald Tribune.

"In the Shadow of the Brontës" is, if reality must to live up to this kind of expectation: "Tom sensespect, aconologomy a woman mill love, from varinglanced at Lizzie uneasily. Why was he reminded between the dark aragedies of the Brontës and them of Christmas live, the Star and the Stable; the Three introduced adventures of a fictional herome, it ultimately below metaphysics and settles for uncompliment. ous parentage who is hired as a scullery maid by the wealthy shipbuilder Edward Grayston. What the master doesn't know, and Lizzie only gradually learns, is that somewhere along the way she has (unaccountably) been deputized by the spirit of Maria Bronte, the mother of Charlotte, Emily and

Anne, to watch over them and their black-sheep brother, Branwell.

Neither this premise nor the fact that the scullery maid ends up with the master will strain the prac-ticed credinity of romance addicts. More bothersome is the reader's growing suspicion that the heroine is a tin Lizzie, not up to the mettle of the Brontes. Fast-cut, alternating scenes advance everybody's stories by fits and starts, but against the re life characters and agonies of the Brontës, Lizzie begins to look mechanical. She also becomes an underachiever, as her supernatural mission turns out to be rather aimless and unimportant. But then, it would be hard for anyone on its own, without such superimposed dithering.

Lizzie absorbs time and attention that many readers

D New York Times, edited by Eugene Maleska

The Brontes are only background in "The Case of the Missing Bronte," and Bronte buffs who have just done Brindley will miss seeing their idols as characters involved in the action. On the other hand, they will be delighted to hear the news that Emily had the time between 1846 and 1848 to write a successor to "Withering Heights." Such a manuscript, we are told, has turned up in a retired schoolteacher's family legacy of old papers. When she is almost beaten to death and the manuscript stolen, Scotland Yard's Peregrine Trethowan gets the case. Perry's an old friend to mystery-lovers, having already appeared in several funny, shrewd novels by three-time Edgar-nominee Robert Barnard. If the wit seems less pervasive here than in his previous books, it's only because Barnard has produced a number of acts that are land to follow. Barnard's gat for same is so biting that, except for protagonists, he has trouble turning out really likable characters, and the ones here are exemplarily repulsive: 1 ms ume around he meindes several nasty academic types, a head librarian who collects literary memorabilia from garter belts to fountain pens (is it an in-joke that one of these belongs to a modern Bronte biographer?), a couple of Viking thigs who square off against a couple of Anglo-American things, and the repellent Rev. Amos Macklehose, "a shepherd of sheep who was mainly interested in their fleeces."

Macklehose, "a shepherd of sheep who was mainly interested in their fleeces."

"The Case of the Missing Brontë" has the merest feel of having been written too quickly, of prose unscrutinized, and odds and ends unaccounted for. But it closes out with a slam-bang finish and a tantalizing snippet of Emily's 100-year-old sleeper. Both of these fictions are genre books, and neither is anything new under the sun. Really, that's where they belong, under a hot late-summer sun, taken chapter by chapter, between dips and naps and nips. But beware of the Bronte bug. It's infectious.

4 Pan Am Records

By Robert Fachet Washington Post Service

CARACAS - Pan American games records were broken in four of the five swimming events Thursday night, with emotional victories by Ricardo Prado of Brazil and Kathy Bald of Canada ending U.S. domination for a night, at least.

It was that fifth event that may have meant the most in the long run, however, as Sippy Woodhead returned to the victory stand after a long absence by winning the 200meter freestyle. Woodhead owns the world record for the event, and in the 1979

Pan Am Games she won five gold medals. But Thursday's victory was her first in a major long-course race since the dual meet against the Russians in 1981. Woodhead, 19, attended the University of Texas, then Southern California; she lost her coach and her confidence, and at one time seriously considered quitting the sport. But on Thursday as she spoke between congratulatory hugs from happy teammates, she seemed to possess her old confidence.

"I wanted to keep my mind clear, use proper strategy and pay attention to what was soing on." Woodtion to what was going on," Wood-head said. "I was real relaxed for the first time in three years. I was confident and I swam my own race. "Even a week ago, when I was up on the blocks, I was scared to death. My heart would beat 300 times a minute. It's been a few years since I swam like this and I'm excited about it."

Woodhead, third at the 100-meter mark, turned it on in the last 50 meters to beat Mary Wayte, the U.S. champion, and Julie Deig-neault of Canada.

BATON ROUGE, Louisiana (AP) — Billy Cannon, a former college football hero, was sentenced to a maximum five years in prison and fined $10,000 on Friday for taking part in a $6-million counterfeiting scheme. Judge Frank Polozola of U.S. District Court said he could not consider a man's status and fame when sentencing someone who took an active and willing role in such a scheme. "I have a simple question before me," Polozola said. "If the name of the defendant were not Dr. Billy Cannon, what sentence would I impose?"

Cannon, the 1959 Heisman Trophy winner from Louisiana State University and a former pro star, is now an orthodontist. He was charged with possession and intent to distribute counterfeit money. Polozola said he could have been charged with many other counts if he had not agreed to cooperate with federal prosecutors.

The victory also denied a berth to Australia II, which lost for only the fifth time in 46 races. The British 12-meter yacht, with Phil Crebbin and Lawrie Smith sharing the helm, overcame a five-second deficit at the start and wound up winning by two minutes, 50 seconds. Both yachts have a 5-1 mark in the challenger semifinals.

Azzurra of Italy, with Cino Ricci at the helm, staved off elimination in the nine-race series by beating Canada 1 by three minutes, 56 seconds.

Jets Down Bengals in NFL Exhibition

CINCINNATI (UPI) — Pat Leahy kicked a 31-yard field goal 2:15 into overtime Thursday to give the New York Jets a 20-17 victory over the Cincinnati Bengals in a National Football League exhibition game. On the first play of overtime, the Bengals' rookie quarterback Jeff Christensen threw a pass that was intercepted by Mark Jerue at the Cincinnati 22-yard line. Four plays later, Leahy kicked his field goal.

While you were away there was a military coup in Upper Volta, which is in Africa below Mali, and above the Ivory Coast, Ghana, Togo and Benin. The new ruler of Upper Volta is a Libyan-backed officer (State Department said they would give me his name as soon as back in Lebanon and the Syrians they had it). We are watching Upper Volta situation carefully but probably will not send any aircraft in case this situation deteriorates, carriers there since it's located right which it is likely to do unless Robsmack in the middle of the continent and very inconvenient for gunboat diplomacy.

I almost forgot to tell you. They also had a military coup in Guate-mala in Central America. Guate-mala is just below Mexico and above Honduras. The Defense Minister Oscar Mejia Victores overthrew the born-again dictator Efrain Rios Montt whom Mejia Victores accused of being a religious fanatic. (Note this is the first time this has been used as an excuse for a coup in Central America.) General Mejia Victores is calling for free elections and a return to democratic principles so our navy is staying out of it.

While Stone is talking to the rebels, Henry Kissinger has been appointed to head up a commission to find a solution to the Central American crisis. The president is hoping Henry will give him a viable Central American policy by next February. In the me time the president is going ahead with covert operations in the area whether Congress says he can or not. Have enclosed map so I don't have to explain where these coun-

Did I tell you what happened to the American dollar while you were gone? It's the strongest it's been in years, which is great for the American tourists but playing havoc with U.S. exports. We've outpriced ourselves from world markets. France has accused us of purposely strengthening the dollar to wreck the French economy. They are so mad they won't help us figure out what to do about Chad.

Most important news you missed while on vacation: George Brett of the Kansas City Royals hit a home run with too much pine tar on his bat, and Dave Winfield of the Yankees was arrested for killing a sea-gull in Toronto with a baseball. No. I haven't gone crazy. I'm just reporting the facts.

The 'Secret' Life of Henry Mancini

By Henry Pleasants

ONDON -- The entry under L the name of "Mancini, Henry (b. Cleveland, 16 April 1924)" n the New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians is brief:

"American composer and con-ductor. He studied flute and pi-ano as a child, and attended the Juilliard School, but his studies were interrupted by war service with the U.S. Air Force. After the war he continued composition studies with Krenek, Castelnuovo-Tedesco and Sendrey. He began composing for films and television in 1952, joining the mu-sic department of the Universal-International studios. Within six years he had contributed scores to over 100 films, including "Breakfast at Tiffany's" with the song "Moon River," displaying a sophisticated popular style. He has received three Oscars."

He has, in fact, received four Oscars, plus 16 Academy Award unbeknownst to Grove, he nominations and 20 Grammy changed the course of underscore awards. He has had seven gold albums, has been the recipient of U.S. universities, and has conducted many of the world's leading symphony orchestras in concerts of music from film scores by himself and others.

It was in this latter capacity that he appeared at the Barbican here last week, conducting the London Symphony Orchestra in four concerts and two programs, each program played on two successive evenings, and attended by larger audiences than the LSO has been drawing to the Barbican for its more traditional programs. It was one of London's best kept secrets. Not a word from any music critic or music reviewer in any of London's four daily and three Sunday "national" newspapers.

The LSO? Well, not quite. Henry Mancini with a symphony orchestra cannot be truly Man-cini without a nucleus of ringers from the jazz world in which he lived as pianist-arranger for the Glenn Miller-Tex Beneke Band just after the war. At the Barbican he had Cecil Welch on trumpet, Jack Gilfoy on drums, Lee Fothergill on guitar and Tony Coe on tenor sax, the latter extemporizing magically on the "Pink Pan-ther" theme.

Blake Edwards. The change in film scoring wrought principally by Mancini — basically a modification of the former European symphonic idi-om of Max Steiner, Alfred New-man, Max Waxman, Erich Korngold and Bernard Herrmann to embrace the Afro-American idioms of jazz and related popular styles — has been viewed askance by traditionalists.

This is reflected in the absence of any reference to"Peter Gunn," "Mr. Lucky" and "The Pink Pan-ther" in the Grove entry, and by the absence of the name of Henry Mancini in the 16 columns devoted in the New Grove to "Film brilliantly and effectively, but it doesn't stand up - at least to their satisfaction - in the venues populated by music critics. Movie reviewers have their eyes on the picture and their ears on the dialogue, seldom pausing to reflect on how the music may influence their perception.

Those jazz composer-arrangers who followed him from the world of jazz to the world of film, notably Lalo Schifrin, Johnny Man-del, Quincy Jones, Michel Le-grand, Burt Bacharach and John Barry, are similarly ignored, al-though some are briefly noted as jazz composers and arrangers under their own names.

There is something paradoxical in this, for the film composer, whether writing for movies or television, is writing the only new music today for which there is a steady and urgent demand. He writes for money, not for grants, benevolent commissions and ten-ured positions at universities. Should this disqualify him for
